Couple intimacy check-in

Notice how things feel right now, without needing to fix or decide anything immediately.

Write privately first. Share only what you choose. You can pause, skip a question, or come back later. These pages support a conversation; they do not ask you to reach an agreement or act on an answer.

1. How I feel about our intimacy lately

2. What feels good or supportive right now

3. What feels a bit off, missing, or unclear

4. My current level of openness

Open and curious / Neutral or unsure / Closed or tired / I don’t know yet

5. What I’d like more of (not a demand)

6. What I’d like less of (or a pause from)

7. One small thing that would help right now

This check-in is about noticing and sharing, not negotiating or solving everything at once.

Desire alignment

Identify where desires overlap, differ, or leave room for curiosity, without pressure to act or agree.

1. Desires I feel clear about right now

2. Desires I feel unsure or curious about

3. Desires that don’t feel right for me at the moment

4. What “Maybe” means for me today

More information / More time / Depends on context / Depends on the approach / Open to talking, not doing

5. What helps me feel aligned with my partner

6. What makes alignment harder for me

7. One question I’d like to explore together

A Maybe is an opening for conversation, not consent to an activity. A No does not need an explanation.

Before talking about desire

Clarify your thoughts before starting a sensitive conversation.

1. What I hope for from this conversation

2. What feels a little scary for me

3. What I need to feel safe

Calm tone / Permission to pause / No immediate decisions / Privacy / Reassurance

4. The simple sentence I want to say

5. What I am not asking for

6. If the conversation becomes difficult

Take a break / Postpone / Switch to writing / Change the subject

7. Closing sentence

Keep this page for yourself if you prefer. You choose which thoughts to share.
